WHISK(E)Y & SPIRITS

Curated by: Jonathan Odde

About Our Whisky Selection

This is not the largest selection in Colorado, or even the largest selection in the Denver-metro area. We simply don't have the space. But honestly, that's not what drives us. Each whisky is selected based on quality, uniqueness, and of course in a few cases marketability. You will find knowledgeable experts on hand to help you select a truly satisfying spirit or cocktail, so please feel free to call on one for recommendations, questions, or simply to chat. It's just what we do here.

How Your Whisky is Served

All of our whiskies, when not ordered in a cocktail, are served neat with a pipette of filtered water. It's assumed that you ordered the whisky to sip and allow the spirit to serenade you with the nuances and complexities the years of aging is intended to provide. Therefore, they are not served with ice (unless specified) as ice considerably restricts aroma, flavor and character. Likewise, they are not served as shots (unless specified) for essentially the same reason. With this in mind, if you wish to use ice or "shoot it", please specify this to your server.

"So What's With the Water Dropper?"

The short answer is, "to add to your whisky to help open the flavors restricted by the bottling." You may ask "why is water good and ice bad?" The answer is temperature. Ice is water, yes, but the chill from the ice inhibits and gathers the flavor compounds found in abundance in most whiskies, causing them to be muddied and muted. Water does two things ice does not. First, it redistributes the disproportionate amount of alcohol and guaiacol lining the surface of the spirit with the heavier, more flavorful components (such as limonene, vanillan, etc.). It also introduces oxygen to "crack" bonds formed between flavor components. Incidentally, this is the same reason we swirl our wine.

But Most Importantly...

EXPLORE! The whisky world is like our world in that it is there to be experienced. It's our goal at The Burns Pub to offer you a unique opportunity to try new whiskies, food and spirits. Not sure which direction to go? Ask one of our whisky ambassadors for some suggestions. There is something in here you're really gonna love!

Single Malt Scotch

Scotch was not the original whisky, nor was it always held in such high regard as today. Both of those bragging rights originally belonged to the Irish. But distillery unification in Ireland and better marketing from Scotland changed all that in the mid 1900s. The term "single malt" solidified the mythos and romanticism about Scotch, even though most people had no idea what it meant.

Simply, all Single Malt Scotch means is it is the product of one distillery (Single) from 100% malted barley (Malt). Like all Scotch, it must be distilled, aged a minimum of three years, and bottled entirely in Scotland. Distilleries in Scotland are divided into 5 regions.

Campbeltown

The only region that is just one town, Campbeltown was a hotbed of illicit distilling and boot-legging before it was legalized in Scotland in 1823. At one time there were 30+ licensed distilleries in this tiny seaside town, solidifying it's claim as the "Victorian Era Whisky Capital of the world". Quality was high and so was demand. But all that changed in the early 1900s, when demand caused the quality to suffer. This combined with distribution woes, increased demand for more accessible Highland whiskies, and prohibition in the United States caused a flood of distilleries to close their doors for good in the early 1900s-1930s. As the distilleries that were left slowly began to disappear, leaving only one in operation, Campbeltown was in danger of extinction from the whisky landscape. But that one distillery was Springbank, a proud, family owned distillery that would not go gentle into that good night and virtually single handedly brought back Campbeltown. Perhaps having learned from their mistakes, Campbeltown now produces some of the finest whiskies in the world once again.

HIGHLANDS

The Highlands is separated from the Lowlands in a belt line that runs from Helensburgh to Stonehaven. But much like the formation of whisky styles and regulations, the separation was due more to English taxation (in the form of the Wash Act and Excise Act in the 1780s) than it was to a difference in styles, although the effects of the implementation of the act lead to a style variance. Effectively, this was to impose heavy regulations on production in the Highlands at a lower tax rate and lower regulations and much higher taxes in the more accessible Lowlands. The end result was a few high volume lower quality distilleries in the Lowlands, and more low volume, higher quality, and a greater number of illicit distilleries in the Highlands. Today, with it's excellent water sources and easy access, the Speyside area of the highlands is home to over half of the malt distilleries in Scotland.

The Island "style" is no style at all. That is by no means a slight, it is simply that the tradtion has been to produce whiskies the locals wanted, often times many styles from one distillery. Of course there are exceptions to this as some distilleries are known for one style and have cultivated that brand recognition. But the range is great, from lighter, more floral expressions, to big, rich and often peated expressions. If there was one thin thread, it's that they tend to be slightly briny.

Islay

Islay is known for it's rich, smoky and coastal malts. This is no coincidence as the island has very few trees and is essentially a giant peat bed (the natural resource used to dry the barley, imparting a strong, smoky character in the Scotch). Not all Islay whiskies are peated though, and some are quite gentle in fact. But with a rich history of distilling here that dates back long before the Wash Act and some of Scotland's most iconic brands, the mystique and devotion to Islay malt is arguably unparalleled in any type of alcoholic beverage. And with nine distilleries and counting, that devotion is not likely to fade anytime soon.

Lowlands

As mentioned in the Highland section, the Lowland region was created by taxation and was at one time the home to some very harmful, even deadly spirits because of it. They were very knowledgeable distillers, mind you, but the heavy taxes lobbied on them combined with a need (or desire) to turn profit prompted many to use too much of the "cut", including poisonous elements of the fore shots. But the advent of the coffey still in 1831 (A still type invented by an Irishman, but first utilized by Lowland distilleries) put an end to that. One of the earliest areas of Scotland to produce whisky, triple distillation was much more common in the Lowlands as it was directly influenced by Irish distillers.

Blended/Blended Malt Scotch

Before single malts were a thing, or at least called single malts, blended Scotch was the Scotch of choice. A style created by William Usher and followed by many others to create a more mainstream style, it essentially made Scotch a household word. “Rum runners”, most famously Captain Bill McCoy, made great livings smuggling premium Scotch blends like Cutty Sark to the United States. Much like Irish “Pot Still” whiskey, Blends were in part a response to English taxation, using less malted barley which was what they were being taxed on. These days, most blended Scotch is intended to be served on the rocks or as a mixer, with a few exceptions.

Unlike blended Scotch, Blended malts are comprised entirely from malted barley and are often not dissimilar to single malts, with the exception being that the spirit is sourced from more than one distillery (like all blends). But often times, their quality actually exceeds that of single malts as they are often bottled to higher standards. For this reason, blended malts are highly respected in recent years.

Irish Whiskey

As previously mentioned, Ireland (specifically Irish monks) were the first to distill whiskey, then known as “uisce beatha” and later anglicized to the word we know today. Although the paths to Ireland’s proud spirit is similar to Scotland’s, the way they handled it was quite different, resulting in a notably different style. As where the Scottish chose to blend malted barley with unmalted grains after distillation, Irish distiller chose to distill them together, later to be called “Pot Still Irish Whiskey”, or if from one distillery “Single Pot Still Irish Whiskey”. Another key difference is that even though there are large amounts of peat in Ireland, peat was rarely used in the making of their whiskies. These key factors have resulted in a lighter and more approachable style, often providing notes of orchard fruits and honey. Unionization reduced the number of distilleries to only two at one point, but recently there has been a flood of new independent distilleries... AT LAST!

American Whiskey

Chances are, whiskey has been distilled in the United States for longer than you think, and not in Kentucky and it wasn't corn-based bourbon either. It originally started being produced in New England in the late 1700s using a rye based mash. And like Ireland and Scotland, the history that has shaped it is a very complex one as well. And though American whiskey is best known for it's bourbon Sub-genre, a revival of rye and a craft insurgence of malted barley and other grains are readily available and making waves in the market today.

Bourbon

Although it's widely believed bourbon must be made in Bourbon County, Kentucky, bourbon can actually be made anywhere in the U.S. It must be made of a mash of 51% corn or more and aged in freshly charred American Oak barrels.

Rye

Rye has been produced in the New England region of the United States for over two centuries, and that's just on record. Today's rye regulations are nearly identical to those of bourbon, with the rye component replacing corn as the main ingredient, giving it a less sweet, slightly spicier profile.

Single Malt & Other American Whiskey

Tennessee Whiskey differs from bourbon in only one self-imposed distinction; it goes through a charcoal filtration stage before maturation known as the Lincoln County Process. The U.S. is also in a creative renaissance right now, innovating and branching out into single malts and artisan blends as well.

Colorado Whiskey

Colorado, specifically Stranahan's, kicked off the micro distillery movement back in 2004. The number of small distilleries has grown almost exponentially since then. Colorado is now home to around 100 distilleries from everywhere from the Western Slope to right down the street. Many distilleries are producing whiskey of various styles, several of those are quite innovative. We are even home to the only Irish style single pot still whiskey outside of Ireland (Talnua).

World Whiskey

Scotland, Ireland and the US are renown the world over for producing whisky, but recently many countries are getting notoriety for their own take on it, most notably Japan. It's worth noting, however, that Japan is no new kid on the block. They've been making whisky there for over a century. But Masataka Taketsuru made it an art form in 1934 when he founded the Nikka Distillery after studying in Scotland (Side note; if you get the chance, read up on Mr Taketsuru and his wife Rita. It's one of the great love stories you've never heard). But elsewhere in the world we are starting to see accolades and prestigious awards going to other countries as well, including India, France, Wales, New Zealand, Tasmania & Taiwan, among many others.

Other Exemplary Spirits

It has been brought to our attention once, maybe twice, that there are other excellent spirits that don't fall under the whisky category. I know. Crazy, right? So we want to acknowledge those here and are committed to bringing some of the best there is available. And what Scotch lover doesn't enjoy a good after dinner sherry or port? Well, they should anyways.

*Whisk(e)y Worth Noting

If you were wondering why some expressions have an * next to them, you've found your answer. These are whiskies with a story, or something you should know about them.

Highland Park 13yr "The Rockies" - $38 - A Single Cask release made exclusively for the Colorado market.

Bruichladdich Black Art 22yr Release 3.1 - $120 - Often considered the best of the Black Art releases, this was released in 2011 when Jim McEwan was still at the helm. Like all Black Arts, the cask selections are unknown.

Bruichladdich Weapons of Mass Distinction II "Yellow Submarine" - $200 - Under the Jim McEwan era, one of the most renown Bruichladdich releases. A sublime whisky with possibly the best (and most hilarious) stories behind it.

Port Ellen 25yr (4th Release) - $400 - Arguably the most famous lost distillery, often considered the definitive Islay malt. Extremely rare.

Linlithgow (St Magdalene) 28yr (Blackadder) - $280 - A very collectable lost distillery, bottled by one of the most respected and selective independent bottlers around. Extremely rare.

Littlemill 22yr (Cadenhead) - $90 - A long lost distillery that burned down under suspicious circumstances. Was believed to be the oldest distillery in Scotland at the time.

Rosebank 12yr Flora & Fauna - $120 - A rare old bottling of a beloved "lost" distillery. Currently being reconstructed.

The Pogues, by West Cork Distillery - $8 - The official whiskey of the legendary band.
